

Special Issue on
Worldwide Environmental Sustainability and Resilience
Call for Papers

Worldwide Environmental Sustainability and Resilience examines global strategies, policies, technologies, and practices aimed at promoting environmental protection, sustainable development, and resilience to ecological and climate-related challenges. It addresses critical issues such as climate change, biodiversity conservation, renewable energy, sustainable resource management, pollution control, water security, and disaster risk reduction. By integrating environmental science, economics, engineering, governance, and social studies, this field supports the development of adaptive and resilient systems for communities, industries, and ecosystems worldwide. Research in environmental sustainability and resilience contributes to achieving long-term ecological balance, low-carbon development, and sustainable solutions for global environmental challenges.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Worldwide Environmental Sustainability and Resilience. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Climate change adaptation
- Environmental sustainability
- Renewable energy systems
- Sustainable urban development
- Biodiversity conservation
- Water resource management
- Environmental policy studies
- Ecological restoration
- Disaster risk reduction
- Circular economy
- Sustainable agriculture
- Carbon management
- Environmental engineering
- Climate resilience planning
