

Special Issue on Human Rights and Social Justice

Call for Papers

On the surface, human rights are of course equal, and equality is the essential attribute of human rights. Many people equate equality with justice, understand justice as equality, and regard equality as the centralization of justice. The universal value view is that equality is the non-derivative goal of the center of justice and the highest value of social justice. A fair society must provide equal opportunities for all members. However, in real life, scholars are not keen on arguing why equality is the highest value of justice, but arguing about how to understand equality and how to implement equality most effectively.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original researches and review articles on exploring human rights and social justice. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Fundamental rights of citizens
- Legal system on human rights
- The principles of social justice
- Justice and efficiency
- War and conflict
- Religion, terrorism and human rights
- Politics, democracy and human rights
- Social work and environment

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.
