

Special Issue on Intersections of Education, Culture, and Society

Call for Papers

Intersections of Education, Culture, and Society explore how education systems, cultural values, and societal structures interact and shape one another. This interdisciplinary field examines how cultural norms, social identities, and historical contexts influence educational practices, policies, and outcomes. It also investigates how education can impact social mobility, foster cultural understanding, and address societal inequalities. By studying these intersections, scholars and policymakers aim to create more inclusive and equitable educational environments that reflect the diverse needs of society, promoting both individual development and collective well-being.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Intersections of Education, Culture, and Society. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Civic engagement and education
- Community-based learning
- Cultural diversity in classrooms
- Culturally responsive teaching
- Curriculum development
- Education and social change
- Education policy
- Educational equity
- Ethnographic studies in education
- Gender and education
- Globalization in education
- Human rights education
- Identity and education
- Language and learning
- Media and education
- Multicultural education
- Social justice in education
- Social mobility and education

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - *Intersections of Education, Culture, and Society” should be selected during your submission.
