

Special Issue on Health, Well-Being, and Social Development

Call for Papers

Health, Well-Being, and Social Development is an interdisciplinary research theme that examines the interconnections between physical and mental health, individual and community well-being, and broader social development. It explores how factors such as healthcare access, social policies, education, economic conditions, and community support influence quality of life, health equity, and social cohesion. Integrating perspectives from public health, sociology, psychology, and development studies, this theme emphasizes evidence-based strategies and interventions that promote holistic well-being, reduce social disparities, and support sustainable human development at local, national, and global levels.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Health, Well-Being, and Social Development. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Behavioral health and social interventions
- Community health and primary care
- Disability studies and inclusive development
- Epidemiology and disease prevention
- Geriatric health and aging
- Global health and development
- Health economics and financing
- Health equity and access to care
- Health promotion and education
- Maternal and child health
- Mental health and psychological well-being
- Nutrition and lifestyle studies
- Public health policy and management
- Social determinants of health
- Social work and welfare systems
- Urban health and environmental well-being

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - Health, Well-Being, and Social Development” should be selected during your submission.
