

Special Issue on Technology and Society

Call for Papers

Technology and Society is an interdisciplinary field that explores the dynamic relationship between technological innovation and social structures, cultural practices, and human behavior. It examines how technologies shape communication, economic systems, governance, and daily life, while also considering how societal values, policies, and institutions influence the development and use of technology. The field addresses critical issues such as ethics, digital inequality, privacy, and the societal impacts of emerging technologies, aiming to foster responsible innovation and ensure that technological progress contributes positively to human well-being and sustainable development.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Technology and Society. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Science and technology studies
- Digital sociology
- Technology policy and governance
- Ethics of technology
- Human-computer interaction
- Information society
- Social implications of artificial intelligence
- Cybersecurity and society
- Technology and globalization
- Innovation and social change
- Media and communication technologies
- Digital inequality and access
- Smart cities and urban technology
- Technology and education
- Environmental technology and society
- Technology risk perception and management

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue - Technology and Society” should be selected during your submission.
