Special Issue on Social, Psychological and Behavioral Sciences

Call for Papers

Social, Psychological and Behavioral Sciences is a multidisciplinary field that examines human thoughts, emotions, behaviors, and social interactions across diverse cultural and environmental contexts. It integrates perspectives from psychology, sociology, behavioral science, anthropology, and related disciplines to explore individual and collective behavior, mental processes, social structures, and human development. The field addresses a wide range of topics, including cognition, personality, mental health, social relationships, decision-making, cultural influences, and behavioral change. By combining theoretical insights with empirical research, social, psychological, and behavioral sciences contribute to understanding complex societal challenges and developing evidence-based strategies to improve individual well-being, community resilience, and social outcomes.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Social, Psychological and Behavioral Sciences. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Social psychology
- Cognitive psychology
- Developmental psychology
- Clinical psychology
- Behavioral psychology
- Personality psychology
- Educational psychology
- Community psychology
- Social behavior studies
- Human development
- Mental health research
