

Special Issue on Language Learning, Digital Linguistics, and AI-Assisted Education

Call for Papers

Language Learning, Digital Linguistics, and AI-Assisted Education covers the processes, theories, practices, and technologies involved in language learning and teaching within digital educational environments. It includes language acquisition, second-language learning, digital linguistics, computer-assisted language learning, natural language processing, educational technologies, intelligent tutoring systems, and AI-supported language instruction. Key areas also include generative AI, adaptive learning platforms, automated feedback, speech recognition, machine translation, and learning analytics for enhancing language learning outcomes and personalizing educational experiences. The field further addresses digital communication, multilingualism, learner autonomy, teacher development, ethical considerations, and the responsible integration of AI into language education.
