

Special Issue on Language, Discourse and Society

Call for Papers

Language, Discourse and Society investigates the relationships between language use, communication practices, social structures, and cultural contexts. This field encompasses sociolinguistics, discourse analysis, language variation, multilingualism, language and identity, intercultural communication, pragmatics, and the role of language in shaping social interactions and public discourse. Research in this area aims to understand how language reflects and influences social norms, power relations, cultural values, and collective identities across different communities and institutions. It also addresses contemporary issues such as language policy, digital communication, media discourse, gender and language, linguistic inequality, and the impact of globalization on language practices and social relationships.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Language, Discourse and Society. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Sociolinguistics
- Discourse analysis
- Critical discourse analysis
- Language and identity
- Language variation and change
- Intercultural communication
- Pragmatics and social interaction
- Multilingualism and bilingualism
- Language policy and planning
- Language and gender
