

Special Issue on International Relations and Political Analysis

Call for Papers

International Relations and Political Analysis addresses interactions among states, international organizations, political institutions, and non-state actors within the global political system. It covers foreign policy formulation, diplomatic negotiations, international security, geopolitical competition, global governance, regional integration, and the political dimensions of international trade and economic cooperation. Research in this area contributes to understanding power relations, ideological differences, armed conflicts, diplomatic strategies, and the influence of domestic politics on international affairs. It also considers emerging challenges such as great-power rivalry, migration, climate diplomacy, transnational terrorism, and the evolving role of multilateral institutions. Through comparative political research, policy evaluation, and geopolitical assessment, this area supports a deeper understanding of global developments and informs strategies for international cooperation, conflict resolution, and political stability.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring International Relations and Political Analysis. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:
